Monitoring and reporting requirements

State program: aquatic ecosystem

1 Summary of methodology

The chief executive will implement a natural ecosystem monitoring and assessment program in accordance with the Water Resource Plan (WRP). The program will seek to assess the WRP's contribution towards the ecological outcome. Assessment will be made of how the environmental management rules provide flows that create specific aquatic conditions which are essential for particular aspects of riverine ecosystems.

Monitoring will collect information on:

- Whether specific aquatic conditions that are essential for particular aspects of the river's ecosystems are created by flows provided under the environmental management rules; and
- The way that particular biological and physical aspects of riverine ecosystems respond to specific aquatic conditions created by flows provided under the environmental management rules.

Specific aquatic conditions may include:

- Hydraulic characteristics such as water depth and water velocity;
- Water temperature;
- Seasonal timing; and
- Duration of flow.

Biological and physical responses may include:

- The breeding/spawning of particular species of aquatic plants and animals;
- Removal of encroaching sediment and vegetation from particular areas of the river and its banks;
- Movement of particular species of animals;
- Absence of physiological stress to individual plants; and
- Completion of life stages/recruitment of particular species of aquatic plants and animals.

Sites will be established in areas that are influenced by environmental management rules. Timing of data collection will depend on targeted flow events, including those provided under the environmental management rules.

The chief executive will work with stakeholders to determine the indicators (species, particular ecological response and specific aquatic conditions) and sites for the program.

2 Reporting

The information from the monitoring program will be used in compiling the annual report on the WRP.
